

Personal Educational Philosophy
Calise Munne
St. Anastasia Catholic School

My mission as a social studies teacher is to inspire a strong sense of civic engagement in my students. I believe that when students are engaged in the learning process they are more likely to become lifelong learners. In order for students to be actively engaged in learning they need to be self-motivated and set goals for themselves. I believe in creating an environment that is conducive to all students learning styles, incorporating all aspects of traditional learning with all the new innovation that technology affords, is the best way to be sure all students are actively engaged at all times.

I believe that teaching history and civics in an exciting format is the best way to create citizens that are engaged in all aspects of our democracy. I feel a great sense of responsibility to ensure that our future generations are well informed, compassionate, and moral citizens, who have learned from history. There is a saying "If we don't learn from history it is bound to repeat itself", I truly believe that students need to learn from the past in order to not repeat it. The strong Catholic values that we teach our students are what will shape them into engaged, informed, and moral citizens, who will one day lead this country.