

Educational Philosophy

Laura Brown

I believe it is the teacher's role to provide a safe, caring, and stimulating environment in which children can successfully learn and grow. It is of utmost importance to realize all children are uniquely different and learn and develop at different rates. Therefore, a constant understanding of the necessity of individual accommodation and the use of diverse strategies is essential in the classroom. This invaluable understanding will facilitate the planning and implementation of a wide variety of rich and exciting educational experiences for young children. These activities will offer opportunities for both challenge and achievement, as the teacher guides the student to positively develop their emotional, social, and intellectual skills necessary for success. Finally, I firmly believe that an education rooted with a faith in Christ and Catholic values allows for the most holistic learning environment.
